The noble Polish family Prus I

Prus I. A floating, silver double high cross in a red field, but the lower left bar is missing; Helmet adornment: an armored arm, armed with a sword, leaning on the crown with the elbow. About the origin it is said: Soon after the conversion attempt of St. Adalbert in Prussia, where he was murdered in 997, several Prussians came to Poland to accept Christianity and stay here. So did three Prussian princes who received this coat of arms and landed property in the Kraków Voivodeship from King Bolesław. The other arrivals and later the captured Prussians who wanted to stay in the country were also settled there in colonies. The resulting estates and colonies were all called Prusy (Prussia) after the nationality of the current owners, and this also became the name of the coat of arms and the family of the Prussian princes who were enfeoffed. However, around 1500 the general designation Prus came into use instead of Prusy. From this coat of arms emerged the coats of arms Prus II and III. A descendant of these princes and bearer of this coat of arms was St. Stanisław from Szczepanów, Bishop of Kraków, who was murdered by King Bolesław in 1079. The later very numerous descendants of the family line to which St. Stanisław belonged in the Kraków Voivodeship included in their coat of arms a small crosier, which they placed on the right side of the cross, to confirm their kinship with the same. They named this new coat of arms Turzyna, which became Turzyma. However, since the end of the 15th century the Turzyna have probably returned to their ancestral coat of arms, because this name fell into disuse. The coat of arms of Prus I are carried by:

quite significant as the colony is com. - Hedgehog. it is true that she paid almost 100,000. tal., especially since the lands there are not special. Also colonists. bought Zbrachlin in Świecie p. and kept to the lowland. on the left bank. 30 years ago he belonged to Wedelstaedt, a senior military officer in the Polish army and in 1830 a German. He was sold shortly before or after his death. Jeżerska from Topolno bought it then, saved her intabulation, and Zbrachlin Teofil Różycki bought it from her. Teofil Róż., now in his sixties, came to the secular country from Lubawskie 35 years ago and married Miss Tuczyńska from Biechówek, an only child who was born in May. fell after the late death of his parents. He lived with her for maybe 3 years. After having two young children, he is reunited with Miss Maria Radkiewicz with his now-wife, C. Major of the Late Stanislaus. Over the years, Biechówko was won over by his mother's son and Róż. bought Zbrachlin and moved there. A few years later he bought Cieleczynek, I think because he has meadows in the lowlands. He was not yet able to pay everything and fell into debt with the Prussian Correspondence Z. 13/VIII. (No. 186)
