Welcome to Paris!

The "Hôtel de Ville" isn't a hotel at all, it's the city hall. The Mayor of Paris governs his city from this building.

Great, we're in Paris! Paris is the capital of France and its largest city.

Paris's river, the Seine, is a key feature of the city and separates it into two parts - the rive droite and the rive gauche. "Rive gauche" means the "left bank", and refers to the southern side of Paris. "Rive droite" is precisely the opposite: the right bank and the northern side of the city. The city of Paris has around two million inhabitants who live in its 20 districts, or arrondissements, as the French call them. If you include all the houses around Paris, around 10 million people live in the Greater Paris area. Paris has a lot of special things to offer its visitors.

One truly unique attraction is the Eiffel Tower, named after Gustave Eiffel, the engineer who designed it. It was built for the 1889 World's Fair. Originally it was intended to stand for just 20 years, but because of its height it makes a good antenna, so it was left standing. The tower is 324 meters high, weighs 7,300 tons and is made up of 18,000 metal pieces, with 2.5 million rivets and 7 million rivet holes.. When it's lit up at night it looks truly fantastic!

The Arc de Tríomphe stands at the end of the Champs-Élysées, the most famous street in París.

Thanks to "Asterix" kids also know Paris under the name Lutetia, as the Romans once called it.
